My grandmother Mary Gibbs Ham once told me she thought that her husband Grandpa George's Mother, Margrett Emily Martin died of a "broken heart." Margrett's oldest son Daniel (Georges bother) was very prominent in the small town he lived in, and his wife Hattie was very social. She hated it she had to take her mother-in-law to social events with her. So when our grandpa George Ham decided it was time to move on (which he did often, another story) leaving a fantastic crop of peanuts to his brother. His brother Daniel caught the departing Ham family on their way out of the area, bringing with him their mother Margrett and all her belongs; saying to them they had to take her with them, because his wife wouldn't have her around any longer. Of course Grandma said she would take care of her. This betrayal of her son broke Margrett's heart, because she was also a social person and liked living with the older son in town near her friends. Grandma said she spent most of her time sitting in the yard under a tree just staring into space. My grandmother said Margrett didn't like her, which didn't help matters. Margrett was always criticizing Grandma for one thing or the other. Her biggest complaint was that Grandma spent more time playing with her children than getting up every morning, and cleaning her already clean house until it sparkled. She put her children first, and I remember how wonderful she was to me. She was a great cook, clean and so sweet. She died of Congestive heart failure in her sleep.
